Mountain Biking is Back!

Trails re-opening on Mount Washington

Mike Manara is excited about mountain biking returning to Mount Washington Alpine Resort this summer.

Manara, the Resort's Snow School Director, is in charge of the mountain bike trails while Don Sharpe, Director of Business Operations and Marketing, is looking after the operational side of mountain biking. The trails are due to open in mid-July.

Manara is also a mountain biker. It has been a way of life for Manara since he lived and worked in Jasper in the late 1990s. "I started riding over 20 years ago. Like a lot of people, I'm a real recreational enthusiast. I'm not a competitive rider. I just really like riding my bike."

Manara moved to Cumberland in 2001 because of its reputation for mountain biking.

"There was already a small community of people riding bikes, maybe 10 to 12," he said. As President of United Riders of Cumberland (UROC) for the past seven years, Manara said his mountain biking experience in the Comox Valley was gained "through the school of hard knocks."

He learned a lot about the village, the sport, trail building and community building. "One of the proudest accomplishments I've had in mountain biking is to be involved in so many world-class events," both in Cumberland and at Mount Washington, he said.

He is also proud of the work that went into signing a land access agreement with Timber-West Forest Corporation on Jan. 31 this year, which allows legal access to the trails around Cumberland. The agreement is key to promoting Cumberland as a mountain biking destination, and it provides an opportunity to market the region in a broader sense.

"The Comox Valley is one of the few regions that would rival a place like Whistler where you have some lift access riding [at Mount Washington], you've got Cumberland, Forbidden Plateau, Hornby Island, Campbell River. You've got all this riding within 45 minutes of your doorstep.

Development of mountain biking at Mount Washington will take place over the next three years. The first year will be to assess what the trails are like after four years of dormancy, and getting four or five of the previous eight in shape for a mid-July opening.

Some of the best trail makers in Cumberland have been hired by the Resort to work on Mike Manara, an avid biker, couldn't be happier seeing mountain biking returning to Mount Washington Alpine Resort.

Mount Washington's trails, he said. "Everybody we've hired has built trail in the local area. I think people when they start to see the product and see there's been lots of mountain bikers involved in the design, they'll be happy."

Pacific Group's Four Season Plans

Mount Washington Alpine Resort has weathered a solid winter under new ownership with Pacific Group Resorts Inc., and is making small steps toward turning the Resort into a full four-season facility.

Pacific Group Resorts is a large company that likes to operate on the local level. They operate four ski and snowboard resorts and four golf courses in the United States. They are an affiliate of Pacific Group, known for their planned base facilities and villages in numerous resort communities, including Whistler.

One only has to look at Wintergreen Resort, one of PGRI's newest American properties in the Blue Ridge Mountains of Virginia to see the possibilities of PGRI's vision.

When PGRI bought Wintergreen Resort in Virginia (Feb. 2015), seller James C. Justice II expressed confidence in both the Company and its real estate arm, EPR Properties.

"EPR and Pacific Group Resorts are experts in the ski business," said Justice II, President and CEO for James C. Justice Companies. "They are going to be able to execute the long-term vision for property owners, members and guests of Wintergreen. We're excited about our partnership and the future development possibilities of Grassy Ridge."

Grassy Ridge is a 400-acre site beside the ski resort that Justice retained in the sale. Wintergreen is an 11,000-acre, four-season resort located 45 minutes southwest of Charlottesville, Virginia

Wintergreen continues to strengthen its four-season reputation under new ownership. "I've been in the industry for over 30 years and I've known the leadership of Pacific Group Resorts for over 20 years," Wintergreen's General Manager Hank Thiess said at the time of the purchase. "They have tons of experience in this industry at some of the most iconic resorts in the West. My management team and I are excited for the possibilities this partnership could bring to our members and guests."

At Mount Washington, PGRI has left day-to-day operation of the Resort to the management team already in place. They've made a few changes, like re-opening the Mountain Bike Park for July 2016, and making changes to the food and beverage facilities.

More announcements can be expected for the winter, says Don Sharpe, Director of Business Operations and Marketing. Until then, one only has to look at the possibilities to see what's in store for Mount Washington.

The Mountain Bike Park will reopen at Mount Washington Alpine Resort this summer, and that's good news to the Resort and the mountain biking community alike.

"Our new ownership played a part in encouraging us to look at all the things we should be doing up here," Resort Director of Business Operations Don Sharpe said.

"Biking was on their list of things we should be doing, and we're happy to be doing that. There's a lot of people up here excited that it's back."

After a heavy snow winter, work didn't begin on the trails until early June, but Sharpe said opening day would be sometime in mid-July. Chairlift access will be available on the Hawk for trail access.

"It's going to be up to Mother Nature and how much work needs to be done." Sharpe said 2016 is year one of a three-year bike trail development plan.

The Bike Park will be open full time from mid-July until Labour Day, then weekends until the third week in September.

The other major change visitors to Mount Washington Alpine Resort will see this summer is a swap between Fresh and Altitude in the Alpine Lodge. Fresh will be moving across the foyer to where the Altitude Retail Store is right now, and a new food and beverage facility will open in the fall of 2016.

A new retail shop will open before winter in the space where Fresh has been, Sharpe said.

The chairlift will open for scenic mile-high rides, including special Ride and Dine and Sunset Ride and Dine features this summer.

Other activities available at the Resort include disc golf, mini-golf, the bungee trampoline and swing sets. There will be a bike shop and retail shop open, and Ted's will be open for post-activity food and libations.

Popular events like Tapped (beer, food and music, July 15) and the Alpine Wine Festival (Aug. 12) are also returning, and families will want to check out Canada Day, the Family Scavenger Hunt and the Inukshuk Building Contest.

The Resort continues to be a popular spot for weddings when the weather warms up, with 27 booked for the summer season, Sharpe said.

Raven Lodge is used exclusively for weddings in the summer, and the Resort has created several spots around the Alpine Lodge that are suitable for ceremonies and photos too.

The Vancouver Island Mountain Centre is open for groups, and is often a choice for wedding parties. It has become a popular place for quilting, yoga and other retreats at well. It features stunning views of Strathcona Provincial Park and the mountains beyond, as well as an indoor gymnasium.

There are a number of rental options surrounding Mount Washington for people looking for a summer getaway to the Comox Valley and Campbell River. "Rent is cheaper here than in the Comox Valley so we're a good hub spot for people to stay and do other activities," Sharpe said.

Ed Brooks

It could be said that for Ed Brooks, photography is all about opportunity.

When Brooks was a teenager in the early 1960s in Prince George, he was writing a column for the high school newspaper when someone handed him a camera and asked him to take photos at school events. That led him to the Prince George Progress, which ran his column when he was a senior. "I did spend a fair bit of time in the darkroom because I was out of the way. I began helping out there," he said.

Once she punches the clock to end her workday, however, Dawson focuses on the natural beauty around her: always with a camera in hand.

Dawson has been photographing stunning landscapes and wildlife photography since she worked with BC Parks and then as a grizzly bear tour guide on the mainland coast in the late 1990s.

"I've always loved nature, wildlife, scenery. Lately I've been getting into conceptual portraiture," she said.

Forecast: Snowmaking

Snowmaking will be in Mount Washington Alpine Resort's future, after a successful test run in 2015-16.

Pacific Group Resorts Inc. is considered a snowmaking industry leader in the United States. Its Wintergreen Resort, located in central Virginia, for example, has a state-of-the-art computerized snowmaking system that can cover 100% of its terrain, using 400 snow guns and 45 weather stations. One snowmaker can control all the snowguns in a computerized system using one computer terminal.

Mount Washington tested two different types of snowguns from different companies over the winter. They were both placed near the Alpine Lodge and their efficacy monitored. "It proved it could be done," said Don Sharpe, Resort Director of Business Operations.

Mount Washington will start setting up a system next year, Sharpe said. "It's going to stage in over the next five or six years. We'll put pipes in the ground this summer and it will start somewhere in the beginner terrain this winter."

The Resort will test some other areas midway up the slopes as well, something like the Coaster, to gauge performance at different elevations.

"As it grows we'll give it significant coverage. We want to make sure we're doing it right before we actually go ahead."

One thing needed to make snow early in the season is water, as manufactured snow is made from water mixed with compressed air. Mount Washington has plenty of water, says Sharpe.

"We have licences for water use, and that's another thing that will grow. We have more than enough water to service us right now."

The Resort was in negotiations with its preferred company to supply more snowguns for next season as the Marmot went to press.

Winter 2015/16 in Review

Mount Washington Alpine Resort's first winter under new ownership couldn't have gone better.

"We were really pleased to have a good winter," said Resort Director of Business Operations Don Sharpe. "We opened on time, we closed on time and had good snow throughout the year. It was perfect: we couldn't have asked for better."

Once Pacific Group Resorts Inc.'s purchase was announced last November, the Company left day-to-day operations to the Management Team already in place at the Resort. "Pacific Group provided us with an opportunity to find out what their expectations are," Sharpe said. The new owners visited Mount Washington several times as the winter season progressed, he added.

"It was really good to get back in the groove of things and not have to worry about if it's going to snow. The last 10 days of the season were epic spring-style conditions with good events going on. It was a good way to end the season." The double diamond Outback opened for the first time in three years, the Boomerang Chairlift getting a good workout all season. "It was awesome to have that back again," Sharpe said. "It gave our high-end skiers some great terrain to use."

Attendance overall was above average, he added. The growing interest in snowshoeing was just one aspect that contributed to solid numbers. "Snowshoeing was a huge growth area for us and it continues to grow every year," Sharpe said.

While the interest in snowshoeing is growing, Sharpe said the Resort is set for terrain to handle more people on the trails. "We still have to manage it. We groom and put up signs to make it safe. Right now we're at 25 kilometres of terrain, so we've got lots of space for people."

Mount Washington again arranged reciprocal agreements with other resorts like Apex, Revelstoke, Manning Park and Seymour in Vancouver, and saw some brisk trade business this winter. "The biggest users were from Seymour," Sharpe said. "We also know many of our season's pass users went to other locations because they told us."

Although the Resort concluded the winter season in April, and summer started near the end of June, employees weren't just waiting for the snow to melt. The Resort hosted some spring weddings, and made plans to reopen the bike park.

Tourism Mount Washington has hired global tourism professional Rod Raycroft as its new manager.

“Rod stood out as the best choice after a lengthy search spanning the tourism industry,” said Ken Armour, President of Tourism Mount Washington.

“We chose Rod because of his demonstrated leadership capabilities and marketing expertise. He is a great fit with our organization and has a deep understanding of both the tourism industry as well as community development,” Armour said.

“We are happy that Rod will lead the Association into the future and build the Resort Community into one of the great four-season experiences on Vancouver Island.”

Raycroft, a professional photographer and travel destination manager, was working in Germany when he applied for the Tourism Mount Washington job. Although previous jobs had brought him from Yukon Territory to Vancouver and Victoria, he had never been to Mount Washington before, so flew to the Island to meet with the Board at his own expense.

Raycroft has a background in tourism marketing and destination management. “The other part of my history is with the Federal Government and economic opportunities,” he said.

He worked in Yukon Territory developing communication strategies for Yukon Land Claim Agreements, crisis communication for environmental issues, and implemented marketing campaigns in seven countries (including two Yukon Tourism brands).

He has hands-on experience marketing a tourism destination along with individual businesses, trade, airlines and third party partners.

“I have a sense of what it takes to create an economy,” he said, and to help a community move forward. It’s something he says he will focus on with TMW.

Saving Cumberland Forest

Cumberland, nestled at the base of the Beaufort Mountain Range on the east side of Vancouver Island, defines itself as the “Village in the Forest”.

The community is surrounded by a coastal Douglas Fir forest rife with flora and fauna, and a system of trails long ago established by both wildlife and outdoor recreational enthusiasts.

However, there is a shadow looming over this idyllic scene: all the unprotected forest is slated for logging.

“The Cumberland Forest is privately owned as part of the legacy of the E&N Railway land transfer from the 1870s that saw over two million acres of land on east Vancouver Island transfer into private hands in exchange for building a railway,” says Meaghan Cursons, project coordinator for the Cumberland Community Forest Society.

When logging became a real threat in 2000, community members formed the Society with the intent of buying the land back and returning it to the community for recreational use and preservation.

“The Cumberland Forest is important to the local community and the broader Comox Valley for many reasons,” says Cursons. “It forms part of two watershed systems, both the Trent River and Comox Lake/Puntledge system, the latter of which is the drinking water source for the Comox Valley.”

The Cumberland Community Forest Society in 2005 purchased 72 hectares of forest on the south side of the Village of Cumberland for $1.2 million. The society is trying to buy the forest parcel by parcel.

“The community would like to see this forest have the opportunity to ‘retire’ from its service as a working forest,” says Cursons.

It is an important habitat corridor and home to diverse plant and animals species including blue list species like Red-legged frogs, Small Eared bats and Roosevelt Elk.

“In fact it is worth far more to the community standing than cut, with a vibrant eco-tourism scene on the rise in the Village that draws visitors from near and far.”

"Mount Washington has a community here. It needs to move forward into a managed approach not only as a destination market but as an economy, and the Board wants to move that way," he said. "I think Mount Washington has great potential. It's an absolutely gorgeous area."

Working with the Resort to avoid duplication of marketing services will be key to moving forward, he said, "so we can spend our money on other things like community development."

Raycroft operates out of the Vancouver Island Mountain Centre, sharing office space with VIMC manager Bridget Orsetti. He is living on the mountain, and managed to enjoy winter skiing despite starting with Tourism Mount Washington on February 22. "I did experience some of the best skiing I've had in probably a decade," he said. "Europe in the last couple of years, there was hardly any snow anywhere. Coming here, seeing the 'ghosts' at the top, was absolutely a dream."

Rod is looking forward to the summer season, and what kind of experiences the warm weather will bring. "I'm really hopeful the new owners (Pacific Group Resorts Inc.) will start making some announcements. News about the Bike Park opening was most exciting. I think they're taking a strategic approach to how they develop the mountain. "As a community organization or Resort Association we should be able to step up and help them achieve some of their objectives."

Welcome To The Wilderness

Strathcona Wilderness Institute has spent more than 20 years providing interpretive programs and information services in Strathcona Provincial Park.

The SWI celebrated its platinum anniversary in 2015 with a host of interpretive programs, and even though there were still a couple feet of snow on some of the circle trails in early June, SWI volunteers were already planning an encore for 2016.

The park is 245,000 hectares of alpine wilderness in the Island Mountain Range mountains between the Comox Valley and Campbell River. The SWI provides information and interpretive services to the estimated 20,000 summer visitors who come to enjoy the beauty of Paradise Meadows.

The non-profit society might be 20 years old, but it is still pertinent to park preservation and education.

"I think it's more relevant than ever before," said Steve Smith, who recently retired from the SWI Board after serving as a director since its inception in the mid-1990s. "There's less money in parks. The pressure is on the Park from industry, from tourism and there's more park as well."

The dynamics of the Park have varied since it was established in 1911: there was a mine at one time, and logging, and a dam. "Now sensitivities have changed, people are really appreciating the wild areas," Smith said.

"We get people in that little Visitor Centre from all over the world."

The Strathcona Wilderness Institute formed in 1995, and they began with a small hut near the entrance to the Park at Paradise Meadows.

Since 2010 they have had a proper building that shares a parking lot with Raven Lodge at Mount Washington, and they easily see 100 people a day during the height of the summer season (about 10,000 people in a typical summer). There is also a visitors' hut at the Buttle Lake entrance to the park.

The SWI's members are all volunteers; passion for Strathcona Provincial Park and preservation of the alpine meadows drive them from year to year.

Smith and his wife began their association with the Park with Friends of Strathcona, and that led to the formation of the Wilderness Institute. The Friends organized a conference at Strathcona Park Lodge north of Campbell River and invited BC Parks staff and government officials; they all discussed the best way to protect the Park.

"One of the things that came out of that conference was education," Smith said. "We decided we needed to start an education arm."

Strathcona Wilderness Institute promotes awareness, appreciation and stewardship in the Park, and is separate from any political activism.

Twenty years on, the message is still strong, Smith said. Young people are losing their connection to nature, which is why preserving parks such as Strathcona is vital, he said.

World-renowned Comox Valley artist Brian Scott loves a good story...

His latest projects have seen him creating art books, painting commissioned house portraits and recording a television program on Shaw TV based on his painting knowledge. "I love the house portraits because you get amazing stories (from the inhabitants)," he says.

Scott's personal story, of growing up and settling in the Comox Valley, is entwined with that of Mount Washington. He first came to the Island in 1961 when his father, an air traffic controller, was posted to Canadian Force Base Comox (now 19 Wing Comox).

He joined the local youth ski club, called the "Fanny Dunkers", and skied Forbidden Plateau with Peter Gibson, now the President of Mount Washington.

"I started skiing there in 1980. I know a lot of people up there. I'm very excited about the new owners," Scott said from his studio in Black Creek, midway between Courtenay and Campbell River. "I think it's a huge opportunity for the mountain."

Scott released a book entitled 'Skiing on the Island' in 2011 as a fundraiser for the Vancouver Island Mountain Centre. The book contains 40 images from Mount Washington Alpine Resort, Paradise Meadows and Strathcona Prov. Park.

The book offers one story per painting, and is an insightful, sometimes humorous view of the Resort's development since its inception (for instance, the chapter on Mount Washington and the Death of the Outhouse).

Skiing on the Island is one of a series of books Scott continues to create. Each has only 40 paintings and 40 stories. He recently returned from a cruise to the Suez Canal, the Holy Land, Santorini and Venice - his 22nd cruise, and one of three he has planned this year.

"I'm doing a book around the world on cruise ships," he said. "The next (cruise) will be Australia/ New Zealand. My company pays for all of my cruises. I've sold a lot of paintings around the world," he said.

Scott is known for his brightly coloured, leaning toward abstract acrylic depictions of his favourite scenes from the Comox Valley and around the world. He paints everything from canvases to cars to spirit bear sculptures, driftwood to his latest, garden art. He's got artwork "pretty much world wide," he says.

He is also working on a six-episode series of painting lessons with Shaw TV. "It's called Too Much Blue. That's my nickname in Cumberland," he said. (Scott is known for underpainting his winter pieces and a series of paintings from his years in Cumberland with blue.)

Scott taught art for 20 years at North Island College and has been painting for 41 years. His television segments are educational: "I paint for half an hour and talk while I'm painting," he said.

"I show people how to lay out a palette. I talk quite a bit about design, colour theory, art history. I talk about what I do, about underpainting. A lot of people have trouble finishing a painting, so I talk a lot about how I finish off my work."

Scott's alpine artwork can be seen at the Resort, the Comox Valley Art Gallery on Duncan Avenue in downtown Courtenay and at his own gallery, 8269 North Island Highway in Black Creek. Scott's work is also available on his website at www.brianscottfineart.com.

Enjoy Hiking Forbidden Plateau and Paradise Meadows...

The following guidelines will help to ensure that the Forbidden Plateau area remains pristine for all who venture there.

HIKING TRAILS - Please stay on designated trails, stay off revegetated areas and avoid taking short cuts.

CAMPING - Designated camping sites are located at Lake Helen Mackenzie, Kwai, Cirlet and McKenzie-Douglas lakes. Please use the tent pads and toilets where provided. If a tent pad is unavailable choose a site that has exposed soil or will not easily be impacted.

FIRES - Campfires are prohibited. Please pack a campstove for cooking.

CACHE YOUR FOOD! BC Parks has installed new metal food caches at Lake Helen MacKenzie, Kwai Lake and Cirlet Lake campsites.

GARBAGE - Help keep the back country clean. Pack out all garbage and please pick up any litter you see. Please do not use outhouses for trash receptacles.

PETS - Please keep your pet on a leash at all times. Free running pets can harm other animals, irritate other visitors and can be harmed by wild animals. Do not allow your pet to swim in the lakes as this could contaminate drinking water sources.

GROUPS - Larger groups of people tend to concentrate use in an area and cause extensive damage to the fragile vegetation. To reduce these impacts, we recommend that group size be restricted to ten or less people. Where this is not possible, the larger group should be split into smaller groups which should travel and if possible camp in different locations.

WATER - Drinking water is available from the lakes at all designated campgrounds. All drinking water should be boiled or purified prior to consumption. Please avoid swimming in these areas as it may contaminate the water supply. It is also important to use the toilets and grey water pits provided to keep these pollutants from entering the lake.

SAFETY - To avoid bear conflicts while camping, never leave food, garbage or toilet articles in your tent. Please use pack sack hangers provided at designated campgrounds. Hikers should make noise when approaching blind corners to warn off bears and other animals.

Mountain Weather can change without warning, be prepared. Take spare, warm clothing and rain gear. It is advisable to leave an itinerary of your trip with a friend or relative.

"If there was ever a time our parks need help, it's now," he said.

When BC Parks stopped all park programs in 2000, SWI stepped up and created its own programs with guidelines from BC Parks.

Volunteers take visitors on guided hikes and there are special talks planned throughout the season. The SWI has cultivated a strong core of Park Stewards through its volunteer program, and they were rewarded with the Volunteer of the Year award in 2011 from BC Parks.

Comox Valley photographer Krista Kaptein spent a lot of time in Paradise Meadows, so much so that she spent a few years with SWI as Coordinator of the Wilderness Centre (she stepped down last spring when funding for her position concluded).

Stewardship in the Park was integral for her. "Paradise Meadows is at the edge of the wilderness. It spans diverse user groups," she said. "The more you learn about the flowers and what they are, for example, you learn some of them are rare."

"It's a special eco-system up there. It's not the same as walking through an area that has been logged and regrown."

The advantage of taking a guided tour with an SWI volunteer, is that you learn the names of the plants and their role in that alpine eco-system, she said.

Walks and talks are put on by members of the Comox District Mountaineering Club, the naturalists' society, SWI members and sometimes guest experts such as the Marmot Recovery Centre or Mountaineer Avian Rescue Society.

Topics are often suggested by park visitors, and trending activities like geocaching. "My own experience is even though you make think you know a lot, you come away with a lot more appreciation and more attachment to the place," Kaptein said.

For summer program information and trail conditions, please visit the SWI website at www.strathconapark.org.

Ed Brooks

One day the photographer didn't show up for the work and the editor asked if Brooks could do the job. "I said sure." He was 16.

By the time he turned 17 he decided not to go back to school, and he never looked back. His first job led to a bigger one with the daily Prince George Citizen, then a job with the Campbell River Courier and Upper Islander, which brought him to Vancouver Island.

Brooks eventually left the newspaper business behind, and opened a photography studio, Backdoor Gallery, in Courtenay. "By the time I got out of the newspaper part of photography, I got into exercising my passion, which was nature," he says.

"Nature photography is really my passion. Both wildlife and nature; that's my sweet spot," he says. Brooks' appreciation for nature began far earlier than his love for photography. "I came from a family where we didn't have television or radio, nobody smoked or drank, my parents never had drivers' licences. I basically lived outdoors as a kid."

Mountain Biking

Crews are building on the strengths of what the Resort had in place previously, he said. "The mantra for this summer has been 'walk before you run'. We're still waiting for the upper third of the mountain to melt. Trails haven't been maintained for four years; other sections were dismantled when we decided to close mountain biking. In other cases we've had poor drainage."

The Resort had approximately 700 responses to a mountain biking survey it publicized this spring, and Manara said they are listening.

"We're going to build the Bike Park to what the market wants and hopefully we'll get a good response from that," Manara said.

"We really want to take our customers' feedback seriously. I think people are excited to see

Brooks still makes sure to get out of the gallery and back into nature nearly every day, whether it is a day-long trip to Gowlland Tod Provincial Park near Victoria with a group of like-minded photography buddies, or a walk around the Courtenay Airpark walkway as daylight wanes.

He is looking forward to getting up to Paradise Meadows too. "I spend quite a few weekends up there in the summer and fall. It's a really remarkable area," he says. The Meadows also promise to show some great colours this fall, he predicts, due to the good snowpack.

"I think this is going to be a really good fall. We've got a snowpack up there to sustain us through the summer."

Manara says he is personally vested in growing the sport of mountain biking at Mount Washington, particularly for families. "I've got a four-year-old and I want to be able to go up there and ride my bike with my daughter in four years when she's eight years old."

Dawson often wintered in Mexico, touring language students around that country. She spent hours with her camera kayaking around the Sea of Cortez in Baja California, Mexico. She has taught in Dalian, China, and in Guatemala City, Guatemala. Now she is settled in Comox.

Dawson's "go-to" spots when she has some free time are the Northeast Woods and the McDonald Wood, Goose Spit, Mack Laing Park areas in Comox. Most are within walking distance of her home, giving her easy access.

"I love photographing in the woods," she says. "Sometimes I'll go for a drive in the country, crawling through farmers' fields and see what picks my fancy."

Dawson also appreciates the digital part of photography, and has started teaching classes in Photoshop.

Dawson recently purchased a new house and plans to build a photography studio once she moves in. "It's for more of my conceptual stuff," she said.

This year is pivotal for the forest society, which has set its sights on an aggressive goal for 2016.

Purchase agreements are under development "and we are so excited to be realizing our goals and saving these very special places in our community for future generations," says Cursons.

Their latest campaign was for a 40 hectare piece called Space Nugget, which was due to wrap up at the end of June (after the Marmot went to press).

Space Nugget is the first of four parcels that make up Phase 2 of the Cumberland Forest Acquisition. This particular phase is right next to the Village of Cumberland.

"Space Nugget is a playground for forest explorers of all ages and skills," says Cursons, "a beautiful green threshold to the upper trail systems and a beautiful backyard for the whole Comox Valley."

Then they will turn their attention to a 60-hectare parcel featuring forests, creeks and riparian areas alongside Perseverance Creek.

Other parcels slated for purchase in the future include China Creek and Japanese #1 Heritage Forest and Perseverance Creek Wetlands.

The community has embraced the forest society's goals, and residents from across the Comox Valley and beyond turn out in large numbers to support their fundraisers - from the popular trivia nights, which always books up quickly, to the annual Perseverance Day Run, which in November 2015 raised $131,784 through runner registrations and donations.

The society has a monthly donation program and one-time donations can be made online through their website at www.cumberlandforest.com. They are a registered charity.

NEWS in Brief

Encompassing people, places and happenings at Mount Washington.

Life Savers Honoured

Members of the Mount Washington Ski Patrol Association as well as some of the pro patrollers were honoured by British Columbia Lieutenant-Governor Judith Guichon in May for their role in saving a skier's life this winter.

Ski Patrol Association members Derek Tolmie, Don McCauley and Carla Valentine, and pro patrollers Sandra McLaughlin, Ian McConnell, Talia Major, Josh Morris, Charlie Eaton, Dan Goodwin, Kianna Thistlethwaite, Dr. Gene Filanovsky, Tina Webber and Michael Hamilton received the Order of St. John Lifesaving Award at Government House in Victoria.

"On Feb. 5, 2016 in Courtenay, BC, the recipients worked as a team and used their first aid skills to help save a life," said Maria Bekiaris, St. John Ambulance marketing and communications coordinator.

"While skiing at Mount Washington, several people witnessed a man suddenly collapse on the hill. Skiers and responding members of the ski patrol immediately went to his aid," Bekiaris related.

The man wasn't breathing and did not have a pulse. Ski patrol members started CPR, and an automated external defibrillator that is located at the Resort was brought to the scene.

"The casualty was resuscitated," Bekiaris said. He was transported to an ambulance and taken to hospital in town.

"Without the immediate application of CPR and use of the AED equipment, the casualty might not have survived," she said.

"The recipients are to be commended for their part in administration of first aid to save a life."

The Order of St. John recognizes individuals or groups that have saved or attempted to save a life, regardless of the risk, through the application of first aid and skills.

Al Wedel Honoured

On his 86th birthday, Al Wedel, a retired music teacher, was honoured by having a ski run at Mount Washington Alpine Resort named after him.

Wedel has been a teacher all his life, teaching professional career. When he retired from teaching music, Wedel decided that teaching skiing at Mount Washington Alpine Resort would be a great "retirement" activity. He could remain active while sharing his passion for skiing with others.

Wedel has been an active pro at Mount Washington for more than 25 years and still teaches full time.

"In the snow sports world there is often one legendary ski pro that has been with the snow school for a long time," Snow School Director Mike Manara said.

"At Mount Washington, Al Wedel is that guy," Manara spearheaded the run-naming project. "Al exemplifies not only the traits of a great ski pro but a great staff member. He is accountable, passionate and works with integrity. He is a team player, who works hard and plays hard."

To honour Wedel, the Resort has named a run in the beginner area 'Wedel's Way'.

"This run is more than just a run," says Manara. "It exemplifies who Al is and what he means to our team. He is a role model for other staff on the mountain."

Some Familiar Names Grace the 2016-17 Alpine Canada Alpine Ski Team Lists

Mathieu Leduc of Comox has been named to the 2016-17 Canada Ski Cross Team. Former Olympian Braydon Luscombe of Duncan, who calls Mount Washington his home mountain, has been named to the 2016-17 Canadian Para-Alpine Ski Team. And Melissa Pemble of Victoria, who attended Podium of Life Ski Academy when it was located at Mount Washington, has been named to the Para-Alpine Development Team.

Leduc, Luscombe and Pemble are among 35 Alpine, Para-Alpine and Ski Cross athletes who will form the respective National Teams that will compete on the World Cup circuits.

Next year will be a world championship year for Alpine Canada Alpine's teams, all of which have the potential to be podium contenders.

You can follow our local athletes on their respective social media, or the Instagram, Facebook and Twitter accounts for the ACA (search Alpine Canada).

Strathcona Nordics Compete At BC Winter Games

Twenty skiers from the Strathcona Nordics and Mount Washington Ski Club represented Mount Washington at the BC Winter Games in Penticton in late February.

Aiden Noble, Stephen Lamon, Zander Swift, Taz Oldaker, Calder Guimond, Emmy Stapff, Amelia Wells, Emma Wong and Annelies Henckel competed for the Nordics.

Anja Leikmoser, Shelby Nilsen, Emily

Johnston, Brooke Taylor, Isabella Cross, Ian Leighton, Eric Ashton, Luke Hofer, Trent Perras, Griffin Hart and Luka Djurickovic competed for the Ski Club.

Congratulations to all athletes for their achievements.

John Trimmer Honoured as Head Coach of the Year

Mount Washington Ski Club head coach John Trimmer had a golden season this year. Trimmer was named Head Coach of the Year by BC Alpine at the inaugural Goldie Awards, held in Kamloops. Trimmer's was one of eight awards handed out at the event.

"I can't imagine a more deserving recipient," Club Member Mathieu Leduc posted on Facebook. "Truly a love for the sport and a community."

Darcy Sharpe Competes in X Games

Cassie wasn't the only Sharpe to compete at the X Games in Aspen, Colo. in January. Her brother Darcy finished sixth in both Men's Slopestyle and Big Air in his first appearance at the X Games.

Spencer O'Brien Wins X Games Gold

Olympic Snowboarder Spencer O'Brien, who grew up on the snow at Mount Washington Alpine Resort, also won Gold at the X Games in Aspen, in Women's Snowboard Slopestyle.

O'Brien had a clean run and landed a switch backside 720 at the X Games in Aspen, Colo. in January.

"Today was very, very validating for me," said O'Brien, who last year landed the first-ever backside 900 in an X Games Women's Snowboard Slopestyle Final.

This was the 27-year-old's 10th X Games and brings her medal count to five (one Gold, one Silver and three Bronze).

O'Brien also placed Second in the Women's Snowboard Slopestyle Semifinal at the Dew Tour Breckenridge in Colorado in December 2015. This was an Event that O'Brien won in 2012.

11 Medals for Strathcona Nordics

Six Strathcona Nordics athletes accumulated 11 Medals in three days at the Haywood NorAm Western Canadian Championships in Prince George in February.

"The athletes showed tremendous consistency and gritty racing," Nordics' Head Coach Andrea Stapff said.

The Event turned out to be a family affair, with siblings Tallon and Aiden Noble, Ross and Stephen Lamon, and Alec and Emmy Stapff representing the Nordics.

Emmy Stapff won Bronze in the Midget Girls' 1.2-kilometre Classic Sprint Race.

Aiden Noble dominated all three of his Midget Boys Races, winning three Gold Medals.

Cassie Sharpe proudly holds her much deserved X Games Gold.

Stephen Lamon, also in the Midget Boys Category, was not far behind, bringing home a Silver and two Bronze Medals.

Ross Lamon won Bronze in the Juvenile Boys' Sprint Race and Silver in the Long Distance Classic Race.

Tallon Noble won Silver and Bronze in two Junior Boys Distance Events.

Cassie Sharpe Brings Home X Games Gold

Cassie Sharpe of Comox has had a dream season with the national freestyle ski team in 2016. Sharpe won gold in women's ski superpipe at the X Games in Oslo, Norway on Feb. 28. Earlier in the year she had an impressive fourth-place finish in Aspen in her X Games.

And on May 19, the Canadian Freestyle Ski Association (CFSA) honoured her with the Most Outstanding Performance of the Year in Halfpipe for her Gold Medal.

"I'm on cloud nine right now," Sharpe said following her golden win - her first-ever Gold Medal win at the X Games - where she held off Olympic champion and four-time X Games Gold Medalist, Maddie Bowman, of the US.

"I came here knowing that I had a chance to medal, but I never thought I could end up on top with the likes of Maddie Bowman," she said.

"When I was growing up, the X Games was the dream and the biggest event you could go to before the Olympic Games added our sport.

I'm just so happy to be here and to be able to perform in front of such a huge crowd."

Sharpe is the first Canadian woman to win X Games Superpipe Gold since Roz Groenewoud won Double Gold in 2012. Sharpe won the CFSA High Performance Rookie of the Year Award in 2015.

'Never Win' Johnson Flies Westjet Skies

A retired Duncan skier felt the luck o' the Irish in March, thanks to the Herb Bradley Challenge at Mount Washington.

Bruce Johnson bought a Herb Bradley Challenge raffle ticket thinking he was really making a donation, because "I never win anything," he said.

Johnson proved himself wrong when he won two flights to anywhere WestJet flies. He chose Ireland.

Chairlift To Success Raises Money for VIMSS

The Chairlift to Success was a success this winter. Spencer Hay, 19, skied 12 straight hours on March 12 at Mount Washington and raised more than $2,000 for the Vancouver Island Mountain Sports Society.

"The event went great," Hay said. "I skied for the full 12 hours without any breaks. Pretty tired and cold near the end."

Hay teamed up with VIMSS because he wanted to raise money to assist individuals and make a direct impact on his community.

"VIMSS is the perfect charity as it helps local mountain athletes pursue and excel at their sport," Hay said.

One of VIMSS' mandates is to provide annual grants to Vancouver Island mountain sport athletes; money raised from Chairlift to Success will provide additional grants in 2016.

"It's amazing when someone approaches you with a new and unique idea, and then has the skill and dedication to carry out the initiative," says VIMSS chair Karen Bonell.

Hay's ski-a-thon was filmed for a video, which can be seen on YouTube (search "Chairlift to success").

$15,000 Raised For Adaptive Sports

Fifteen teams raised $15,000 for the Vancouver Island Society for Adaptive Snowsports (VISAS) during the annual Herb Bradley Challenge in February.

The challenge is named after the late Herb Bradley, founder of adaptive snowsports in the Comox Valley. He led a small group of outdoor enthusiasts at Forbidden Plateau Ski Lodge in the early 1960s and began offering ski instruction for people with physical and mental disabilities.

The Vancouver Island Skiing for the Disabled Society was officially established at Mount Washington as a non-profit, charitable society in 1992. The organization (now known as VISAS) now has 90 volunteer instructors and supports more than 500 participants each season.

Investors Group won first place in the slalom course, Westview Ford was second and Thermo Tec third. Westview Ford was the fastest overall team, while Bedrock Beauties won the team spirit award. Corey Nickerson was the fastest overall athlete after finishing the course in 15 seconds.

Forsythe and Butler Named to Viasport Advisory Group

A pair of Comox Valley athletes has been named to ViaSport's Girls and Women Advisory Group for sport and physical activity in British Columbia.

Olympian Allison Forsyth, who started her alpine skiing career at Mount Washington Alpine Resort and is now based in North Vancouver, joined the group last March.

Robyn Butler, a marketing specialist with the Comox Valley Regional District, joined in February. A former competitive figure skater, Butler has been involved with the Active Comox Valley steering committee, which addresses barriers to providing accessible and affordable physical activity opportunities to engage community spirit and participation.

This is the second year for the advisory group, comprising 13 female sport leaders.

"Creating more equitable opportunities for girls and women in sport is a priority for the province of B.C.," Peter Fassbender, Minister of Community, Sport and Cultural Development said in a press release. "Having the right leaders around the table is crucial as we start to translate our goals into action."

ViaSport's goal is to see 50 per cent female representation across all levels of sport in B.C. by the year 2020, viaSport CEO Sheila Bouman said.

"Currently at 42%, we are proud to have some of B.C.'s top thought leaders and sector experts working with us to achieve this goal."

Discovery Channel's 'Daily Planet' Films on Mount Washington

Residents living on Vancouver Island know it's possible to ski and surf on the same day. Visitors often scoff at the idea: but one television program has given them proof that it can really happen.

Mount Washington Alpine Resort hosted the Discovery Channel's Daily Planet TV show this past winter to prove the theory correct.

"As weather-driven sports go, 'ski' and 'surf' are at opposite ends of the spectrum," Daily Planet field correspondent Sean McShane said as he ticked off skiing and surfing in the same day from his bucket list. "But a handful of spots on the planet put both in reach."

New Air Service from Victoria and Abbotsford

Mount Washington just got a little closer to Victoria and Abbotsford. Island Express Air announced in April that it has launched a new daily air service to Abbotsford and Victoria from the Comox Valley.

The service started May 16. The airline is also offering flights to Boundary Bay Airport in Delta, and service to Powell River for an add-on fare.

That means travellers coming from those destinations can connect much easier with the Comox Valley.

"This is a niche market that has been underserved and we are pleased that Island Express Air has seized the opportunity to cater to those passengers who are looking for another way to access those destinations," said Fred Bigelow, CEO at Comox Airport (YQQ).

"Our flight times have been built with the business traveller in mind but are also well suited to the leisure traveller who wants to avoid taking up half of their day driving or waiting for the ferry," Island Express Air owner Gerry Visser said.

"New Hope" Marmots on Mount Washington

'Hollis' sunning herself on Mount Washington.

Marmot Recovery Foundation welcomes 13 young Vancouver Island Marmots from Calgary Zoo, part of a "New Hope" for the endangered species.

As well, last fall the Foundation welcomed Adam Taylor as the new Executive Director. Long-serving Viki Jackson took a well-deserved retirement. While Adam is new to marmots, he does arrive with a background in conservation and in protecting species at risk. For the past eight years he was the Executive Director of Habitat Acquisition Trust where he led projects to conserve many endangered species, including Western Painted Turtles, bats, snakes, and even endangered slugs!

"I am passionate about conserving our natural heritage" says Adam, "and the Vancouver Island Marmot is a special species that has a real chance to come back from the absolute brink of extinction thanks to the hard work of the Foundation and its partners. I am very excited to join the Foundation and to get to know these incredible animals better."

Among the first marmots Adam met were young yearlings from the Calgary Zoo that arrived at the Tony Barrett Mount Washington Marmot Recovery Centre this spring.

Luke, Leia, Jabba, Anakin, and nine others travelled with the Foundation's wildlife veterinarian, Malcolm McAddie from the Zoo to their temporary home on Mount Washington.

"One yearling in particular was especially bold," said Adam, "the very aptly named Han Solo wasn't going to be put off his food just because I was hanging around watching."

You've probably already noticed a theme in the names of these marmots. In honor of the new Star Wars film, all the yearlings were given Star Wars names by the Calgary Zoo keepers. But while some of their namesakes are villains, all of these younglings are definitely heroes.

Executive Director Adam Taylor

During their stay in the Centre on Mount Washington they will be implanted with transponders and then go through a quarantine period where their health is assessed and they are given a chance to adjust to the West Coast before being released.

Later in the summer, they will join the nearly 300 wild marmots that now live in the mountains of Vancouver Island. It's a great increase from just over a decade ago when only 30 remained in the wild, but there is no doubt that marmot's recovery is still a work-in-progress.

Compared with other famous endangered species, there are still fewer marmots in the wild today than there are Giant Pandas (1500 to 3000), Mountain Gorillas (about 800), or Siberian Tigers (about 500). Fortunately for the marmots, unlike many other endangered species, their alpine habitat is still largely intact.

"The meadows are still there, even if the marmots aren't always" says Adam, "and where

ADOPT A MARMOT!

When you join the Adopt-a-Marmot Club, you help protect the endangered Vancouver Island marmot every day of the year. Pre-arranged monthly gifts are a convenient way to help save this beautiful and special creature from extinction. Your gift supports the field research and captive-breeding that's so critical to marmot survival. For instance, your contribution will help fund ear-tagging of wild marmots, which is the only way in which we can identify and track individual marmots and the success of recovery efforts in future years.

When you Adopt-a-Marmot you'll receive:

- Your personalized Marmot Adoption Certificate
- Your full-color poster of a Vancouver Island Marmot
- Your official recovery project newsletter (The Marmoteer)
- Your special year-end report about individual marmots

there is habitat, there is hope for the species.” Like the Jedi at the beginning of the original Stars Wars, the marmots are scattered and few, but there determined and dedicated people in their corner, and the marmots themselves are a tenacious and hard-working.

During a recent visit to Mount Washington, Adam witnessed first-hand how the marmots scamper up the steepest slopes and dig burrows in the rocky ground. “I was put to shame by the marmots, there was no way I could have kept up with them running up and down the rock piles and the hill. I’m glad I all I came to do was watch!”

He was also there for one of the sadder moments, as Joey and Jordan, members of the Foundation’s field crew, discovered that Revelstoke, a four year old marmot living on Mount Washington, had died.

“It’s hard when you find a dead marmot. We know each of these marmots by name, and of course we do everything we can to ensure they have the best chance for survival.” But deaths do happen. In Revelstoke’s case, he died just after waking from hibernation, probably as result of low-energy reserves.

The period just after they wake from hibernation is an especially precarious time for Marmots. Their body fat reserves have been used up during their seven month sleep, but their digestive systems aren’t yet running at full-speed. Some just don’t have enough extra fat to get their bodies going and feeding properly again.

Spring is the changing of the seasons, and sometimes it is also a changing of the guard. Some of the young marmots from the Calgary Zoo will join the healthy colony at Mount Washington, and carry on the legacy of Revelstoke and other marmots that come before them.

They truly are a “New Hope”, along with marmots like Nicola, Hollis, and Buffy who continue to enliven the slopes. In the background, Malcolm, Cheyney, field crew like Jordan and Joey, and now Adam will continue to support their recovery in the alpine of Vancouver Island.

Flores Island... Seaside Home for Sasquatch?

Could Sasquatch be lurking on Flores Island, 80 kilometres away from Mount Washington Alpine Resort as the crow flies?

A young fisheries officer from Ahousaht thinks so. And so do First Nations legends from the West Coast.

Two years ago, Luke Swan Jr. said he was patrolling the waters around Ahousaht, northwest of Tofino, when he saw a figure he didn’t recognize crouching on the shore. “Something really big stood up, probably between eight or nine feet,” he told CTV News in 2014.

He said he had seen enough bears in his life to know it wasn’t a bear. He and his father went back to the shore and found some footprints. According to the Ha-Shilth-Sa newspaper, the men saw 10 bare footprints in approximately a 30-foot area. The man who witnessed the footprints said they were 16 inches long, about seven to nine inches wide and about three feet apart.

The men felt their findings pointed to a sasquatch having been in the area, but they couldn’t confirm it.

In Nuu-chah-nulth lore, buc miis (pronounced book-mees), or bigfoot, is a symbol of good luck and spiritual strength. He is known to have lived for thousands of years in the Clayoquot Sound watersheds.

Ahousaht is located on Flores Island, 20 kilometres northwest of Tofino on the west coast of Vancouver Island. The main settlement on Flores, Ahousaht is only accessible by boat or float plane. Its inhabitants are primarily members of the Nuu-chah-nulth First Nation.

Although Flores is surrounded by water, there are recorded reports of sasquatches swimming, says renowned cryptozoologist John Bindernagel.

The Courtenay biologist last year investigated sasquatch vocalizations in Alert Bay on Cormorant Island (northern Vancouver Island). The idea that sasquatch could swim from island to island isn’t farfetched, he said at the time.

“We need to tone down our arrogance that says ‘this cannot happen.’ Healthy skepticism is perfectly in order and it’s a really good question, where did it come from?”

Bindernagel would like to see more scientific exploration of these kinds of sightings. And he says communities and individuals just aren’t getting that.

“It’s like, how could it possibly be there, rather than let’s review the evidence and see if it is. We should all pay attention to these reports.”

Potential Bylaw for Fire Protection Services

The community at Mount Washington is another step closer to having a fire service in place.

The Comox Valley Regional District has endorsed three recommendations as a result of last year’s Mount Washington Fire Service Study: the creation of a draft borrowing bylaw, development of a property ownership analysis and creation of a service agreement with a fire department.

The draft borrowing bylaw will enable the regional district to pay for the rest of the steps, says James Bast, CVRD Manager of Fire Services.

“The draft service bylaw and borrowing bylaw will fund the question on a referendum that will be held for Mount Washington property owners that are eligible to vote,” he said.

The property ownership analysis will identify who is eligible to vote - one of the trickiest questions in the process. “What we’ve found through research is there are still a number of property owners that may not be able to vote in the referendum,” Bast said.

If someone has a lease agreement less than 99 years, they are not eligible. If someone has a condo owned by a corporation, that corporation cannot vote because there are no allowances in British Columbia for such a vote.

If a property has multiple owners, the property only gets one vote. “Those multiple owners would have to appoint one person to be their voter,” Bast said.

Bast will now begin contacting owners to find out who is eligible, and whether they want to change their ownership status so they can vote. He will also begin talks with Oyster River, Cumberland and Courtenay fire departments to see who can best help them as a fire service provider.

“We have started talking to these local governments to find out their willingness and ability to enter into a service agreement with Mount Washington,” Bast said. “What we’re contemplating is having a service agreement with one entity.”

Bast hopes to hold the referendum later this year, although a date has not yet been set. “We’re still moving through the process.”
