Marketing Mount Washington... A Bright Future Ahead!

After years of careful planning, Mount Washington has its own Resort Association. The Association, doing business as Tourism Mount Washington, will promote, facilitate and encourage the development, maintenance and operation of Mount Washington Alpine Resort and association members.

The woman in charge of Tourism Mount Washington is Sarah Nicholson, an experienced marketing strategist based in the Comox Valley. Nicholson was running her own marketing consultancy business when the new job came up at Mount Washington.

Her first two months on the job were spent researching similar resort associations and liaising with other organizations that already exist at Mount Washington.

Although it seems like Tourism Mount

Washington is starting from the beginning, "we're following a tried and true model," she added. The purpose behind Tourism Mount Washington will be to co-ordinate the common interests of all property owners, businesses and stakeholders and to promote their "all-season" alpine resort, Nicholson said. "This alone is a key benefit to...stakeholders who operate on small budgets and who lack the time, resource and expertise to effectively market their products to their full potential."

Win Win Partnership for Vancouver Island Mountain Sport Society

The Vancouver Island Mountain Sport Society has signed an historic partnership with PacificSport that VIMSS Chair Rick Morson hopes will result in a Regional Sports Centre at Mount Washington.

"I think it's really important for securing the funding and sponsorship for building the Sports Centre," Morson said of partnering with PacificSport.

The partnership is the second phase of the Mountain Sports Centre development, Morson said. The first phase was completed earlier this year when portions of the Biathlon and Nordic trails were outfitted with lights. The most important objective now will be raising the funds necessary to build the centre, he said.

The Mountain Sports Centre will cost approximately $1.5 million to complete, Morson said.

News In Brief

Encompassing people, places and happenings at Mount Washington.

The Whiskey Jack Cafeteria received an $80,000 conference-ready makeover.

New stunts, rails and fun boxes have been added to the Stomping Ground Terrain Park for the 2007-08 season.

Extensive new glades have been created on the front side of the mountain, adjacent to the Hawk 6 Pack Chair.

Mount Washington will host the B.C. Freestyle Skiing Championships, March 27-30, 2008.

Mount Washington Alpine Resort and Invest Comox Valley have teamed up to bolster the Resort's labour force. Invest Comox Valley has helped the Resort develop a strategy to attract skilled workers to the region.

For example, says Invest Comox Valley's Marketing and Communications Manager Lara Greasley, ski instructors are available for immigration attraction status. This is just one phase of a larger labour force strategy being developed for the Valley.

the 2006 Winter Olympics in Turin, Italy.

Forsyth participated in Alpine Canada's spring camp in Whistler in June, and it looked like all systems go. Then, five days before the start of the 2007-08 World Cup season, her knee flared up, forcing her to miss the 2008 season.

"It's been hard, a harsh thing to deal with," Forsyth said from her Calgary home. Forsyth, who has been told by surgeons they are concerned about her ability to function in everyday life with the current state of her knee. She will meet with a specialist in Ontario to discuss a procedure known as an osteotomy.

Forsyth is not just battling injury, she is also helping in the battle against breast cancer. She has launched her own website, www.pinkhelmet.ca, to raise awareness about inflammatory breast cancer, which her mother died of last April.

The plan to save the Vancouver Island Marmot from extinction received a $133,000 boost from the Province in October. The money will go towards captive breeding programs spearheaded by the Marmot Recovery Foundation.

Our Sasquatch and Marmot are now Olympic Mascots. The Sasquatch will be known as "Quatchi", and the Marmot's name is "Mukmuk". We're pleased the world will now enjoy them as we do.

Elusive Sasquatch Caught on Film!

For the first time ever, Sasquatch has been captured on film by a faithful Marmot reader.

The shot, which the reader has willingly shared with The Marmot, is the clearest shot our editorial staff has ever seen.

The witness, who asked to remain nameless, said he "heard a weird barking sound" before the Sasquatch broke out of the trees. The witness had participated in a Sasquatch calling course held last year by the Search for Sasquatch Society, which is why he recognized the sound. Besides footprints, naturalists have never found any proof of Sasquatch at Mount Washington.

In other Sasquatch news, a documentarian in Alberta claims he has discovered a "Bigfoot domicile" or "sylvanic". In a CanWest News Service article, Todd Standing said he originally began studying Bigfoot to debunk the creature as a myth, but instead has become a believer.

Standing has not publicly revealed where he studied the Sasquatches, saying he is afraid other humans will hunt them down. Standing is collecting signatures for a petition he intends to introduce at the House of Commons in Ottawa. He wants the Federal Government to vote on specie protection for bigfoot.

Hair samples from the trees within the vicinity of this sighting have been sent away for DNA analysis. Unfortunately results were inconclusive.

Peter Gibson In Profile...

Peter Gibson grew up a hockey player in Cranbrook, BC.

When his family was considering a move to the Comox Valley in 1960, where his father, a doctor, was offered a job as the Director of the Upper Island Health Unit, the wiry centre discovered to his chagrin that there was no hockey program.

Then, a prophetic event happened: he and his mother were looking at a house on a pre-move trip. "I went into the bedroom and (the son) had a trophy case in his bedroom. He had the Wells Gray Trophy he won at Forbidden Plateau," Gibson related. "I got quite excited about skiing," he said. "I had an ambition to get that trophy. Four years later it was back up on that shelf. And it stayed on that shelf for three years."

Decades later, as Gibson sits by a snow-brushed window talking about his early days of skiing and his downhill and slalom racing reign, his passion is undiminished.

Gibson is the President of Mount Washington Alpine Resort, having worked his way through a variety of jobs, from trail crew before the mountain opened in December 1979 to

Director of Skiing in 1979, Guest Services Manager in 1989, Resort Services Director in 1994, General Manager in 1999 and his present title since 2001. He also spent four off-seasons teaching in Tasmania. But he really began his career with the late Herb Bradley's Fanny Dunkers.

Gibson was president of the club when he was 15 and 16 years old, and ran meetings at the Courtenay Recreational Association. "It was a great leadership program," he says. "Being around Herb Bradley, he was a pretty big inspiration to all of us that he taught."

"As a boy he took to skiing like a duck

This 20th century photograph shows Peter Gibson with one of his many ski school classes. Allison Forsyth, who later went on to be an Olympic Champion, was part of this group.

to water," Bradley wrote about Gibson in 1990. "Peter is an extremely hard worker and dedicated to the sport of skiing. It is his life."

Last year he challenged his staff to see who would get out on the runs the most often. Officially, he finished second with 119. Unofficially, he says since he skied in other places for two more days, he won. It's the thrill factor that drives him to strap on the shape skis, even though he also must wear braces on both knees now.

"It's a combination of fresh air, the views, the thrill of going fast – also the technical part of it," he says. "It's like driving a race car on country roads. It's the same thing."

He keeps his teaching certificate current (Canadian Ski Coaches Federation Level 4 teaching and Level 3 skiing, and Professional Ski Instructors of America Level 3), even though the only "students" he has right now are his daughter Mallory, 13, and son Connor, 11.

Teaching methods have changed since he first took his certification course with Mike and Ann Hadney when he was 18. "I feel I'm still getting better," he says. "The learning never ends."

Gibson's passion for the sport extends beyond the boundaries of Mount

Washington Resort. He chairs the B.C. and Yukon zone of the Canada West Ski Areas Association, overseeing 47 resorts. He would like to chair the entire organization, after a couple of terms in this position. Gibson also sits on three boards: Vancouver Island Marmot Recovery Foundation, Comox Valley Community Foundation and the Mount Washington Board of Directors.

Letters of recommendation from his peers speak to the respect that Gibson receives for his efforts. Jimmie Spencer, President and CEO of the Canada West Ski Areas Association, says "I have always found him extremely pleasant and cooperative to deal with." "Peter has impressed me in a number of ways," writes John Gow, who was President of Silver Star Mountain Resort in 1990.

"He demonstrates a very sound overall knowledge of our industry, as well as a clear understanding of specific resort operations. He has shown a real commitment to Mount Washington's growth and development as a first-class regional destination ski resort."

Not bad for a man born in Malaysia who never saw snow until he was five years old.

A New Vision for Development

Chris Le Fevre is better known for his urban developments in Victoria like The RailYards and the Leiser Building, or resorts such as Middle Beach Lodge, Weigh West Marine Resort or 1431 Beach Club at Cox Bay in Tofino on Vancouver Island's West Coast. He is bringing a new vision to Mount Washington Alpine Resort.

Now, he has left the beach for the alpine meadows and snow glades of Mount Washington Alpine Resort. Le Fevre is a joint venture partner with the Resort in the development of its lands. Beaufort Heights Alpine Homes is the first phase of Le Fevre's development vision. Crews have spent the past two summer seasons servicing an area along Nordic Road in preparation for building, including the removal and moving of tonnes of rockwork.

The next phase in Le Fevre's development plan is Pacific Ridge, comprising 12 ski-in, ski-out townhouses. An access cul-de-sac has already been built off the parking lot for the Alpine Lodge; the first phase of this development is currently before the Comox-Strathcona Regional District.

Other phases include mountain estates, townhomes and mixed-use lots – perhaps even retail – in a village setting, above the Alpine Lodge.

Le Fevre cautions that Mount Washington is not a place to over-build, rather an area in which to progressively build out, while paying attention to the marketplace. "The master plan is one thing, careful, progressive and not precipitous growth is another," he said. "Retail development at Mount Washington I see as a progression from those retail businesses currently run by the mountain,"

Le Fevre said.

Retail needs to be "cautiously advanced," he said, any third-party retailers will need to piggyback on the existing energy at the Resort. "Perhaps the most significant progression in this regard will be not total retail but a free-standing commercial food and beverage establishment."

Le Fevre's development plans have been well received by the board of directors at Mount Washington. "The move to bring Chris on as a joint venture partner has been very positive," Mount Washington Alpine Resort President Peter Gibson said.

Le Fevre is under no illusion that Mount Washington must be the next Whistler. Rather, the Resort "should be recognized as a wonderful mountain environment primarily for families on Vancouver Island," he said.

In the next decade he envisions more alpine cabins – "just like Whistler in the early days" – some ski-in, ski-out family townhouses, refreshing the day lodge and a new "summit" building at the highest point on the mountain:

"A place to lunch, a place to reflect and truly enjoy the splendor of the very unique mountaintop," he said. "This summit building does not need to be grand, but it should be there as an iconic place for people to meet at any time of the year." A skier himself, "I don't think I could be excited about working on the mountain if I didn't," he says, Le Fevre recognizes that Mount Washington has a solid future as a recreational habitat.

PARTNERS IN YOUR FUTURE

There's lots to look forward to this winter... especially at night!

Night Lights for 2008

The unusually cold summer that Mount Washington Alpine Resort experienced this year could spell success for the winter. "The last time we had a summer this cold was 2001. It was a good, cold winter," says Karen Bonell, Resort Director of Marketing.

The Resort saw its first dusting of snow on Sept. 29, and it snowed four more times in October, leaving everyone with a positive feeling for the 2007-2008 season.

The big deal for Mount Washington this year will be its night life. New lighting has been installed at the Stomping Ground Terrain Park and Coaster (off the Whiskey Jack Chair). The new lights mean the Resort now has a complete cross-section of lit areas: the original Green Zone for beginners, the Coaster for intermediate skiers and the Stomping Ground Terrain Park for experts. Night skiing will be open Thursday to Saturday from 4:30-9 p.m. Experience the night life every night during Christmas Breaks and both weeks of the March Spring Break. The Resort is also selling a night season pass for $179.

Resort President Peter Gibson is revved for night skiing, too. He intends to make the most of the after-hours opportunity by skiing with his kids, Connor, 11, and Mallory, 13. Night skiing will also allow staff members to get out on the slopes after work. "You get caught up in the job and you don't get out as much," he said. "The night skiing...will get the staff out after shifts."

But staff be warned: if you get a chance, so does Gibson. And he's out to break his record of times skied in a season. "I challenged all my staff last year that I would be the most at the end of the season," Gibson said.

Along with night skiing comes other forms of night life, such as night rentals and Snow School, and night noshing at Marmots, Fat Teddy's and Fireweeds (which had a facelift in the summer, especially at the Starbucks counter). "You have a really good, full range of products that will be used that much more," Bonell said.

Summer 2007 In Review...

Summer was a time of highs and lows in 2007.

"Summertime was good. It certainly wasn't banner because of the weather," said Karen Bonell, Resort Director of Marketing. "We barely got the outdoor patio set up because of the weather...it just wasn't pleasant enough." Chairlift rides were down last summer because of the inclement weather, she said. "People want nice weather when they take that activity. With our cool, rainy, downright cold summer we saw quite a downturn in people taking (the chairlift)."

Mountain bikers, however, didn't seem to care about the weather: they came to the Resort in droves, Bonell said. Mountain bike business was up more than 25 per cent, and constant weather lows caused rain and cloud on a lot of weekends.

The fact that the Resort hosted several prestigious mountain bike events didn't hurt, either. For the first time ever, Mount Washington hosted a national Canada Cup Race. More than 500 riders participated - these are the competitors who are selected to go to the worlds.

The second annual Bearclaw Invitational was bigger and better than the previous year. Four thousand spectators came out for the only nice weekend in August, and some important big magazine media exposure showed up, too. "That event gives us all sorts of international media we could never get on our own," she said.

For the first time in years there was no horseback riding at Mount Washington, as the contractor backed out at the last minute. However, "everything else worked out," she said.

Hollywood has its Walk of Fame, Toronto lays claim to Canada's Walk of Fame, and now the Comox Valley has its Walk of Achievement on 5th Street in Courtenay.

"It's really taken off," says Dave Durrant of the Walk of Achievement committee. "We've had all kinds of interesting nominations and so many terrific people that we had no idea were from the Valley." The Walk of Achievement was created to recognize outstanding achievement in individuals from the Comox Valley who have excelled in their field. "It's to inspire Comox Valley youth to believe in themselves and to explore the limitless possibilities the world has to offer," Durrant said.

The first inductee was broadcasting legend Red Robinson, who was born in Comox and spent the first six years of his life in Fanny Bay before going on to interview such historic music stars as Elvis Presley and the Beatles. Robinson's plaque was unveiled in December 2006.

The second candidate for the Walk of Achievement is Dr. Fred Leung, PhD, FCA, CD, who was inducted in November. Leung is a nationally-recognized clinical biochemist and Professor Emeritus at the University of Western Ontario. "We think he absolutely fits the purpose of the walk, to a T," Durrant said.

Raven Lodge was booked every weekend for weddings, sometimes for two weddings in a weekend, and is already booked heavily for the 2008 season.

In fact, the Wine Festival had to be moved out of Raven Lodge this year to make way for more wedding dates. Both the Wine and Beer Festivals will be booked on Friday nights next year to make sure they can happen at Raven. "It's a huge business to be in there because it fills up June, July, September and October," Bonell said.

Outside the doors of Raven Lodge, the new trailhead into Paradise Meadows was a busy place. "There was a really good buzz over the new trail," said Andrea Blaseckie, who managed the information hut for the summer. Blaseckie is an interpreter and director with the Strathcona Wilderness Institute. "The numbers were up significantly from last year," she said. "It was over 1,000 more visitors to the hut."

One of the features at Beaufort Heights is a rock wall that has been constructed using material from elsewhere on the building site.

Blaseckie said a couple of visitors in electric wheelchairs tried the trail and "they loved it." Other visitors who walked with canes or who were less mobile said how happy they were that they could access the sub-alpine.

The new trailhead is now graced with a carved stone sign. Other new features last summer included a kiosk with map of the Park and a small amphitheatre for education groups or for visitors to simply sit and enjoy the view.

Back at the Alpine Lodge, $800,000 worth of repair and maintenance was done through the summer and into the fall. "Keeping up with all the equipment and facilities is a huge expense," Bonell said. "We do that from the day we close to the day we open. It's on going. We have a 30-year-old plant here so we're constantly keeping up."

BC Environment Minister participates in Marmot Release

Vancouver Island marmots were reintroduced to the sub-alpine bowls of Strathcona Provincial Park where they have not been recorded in twenty years.

Preparations for the release of two groups of marmots were made at the Tony Barrett Mount Washington Marmot Recovery Centre on Mount Washington. The Marmot Recovery Foundation (MRF), in partnership with the B.C. Ministry of Environment and BC Hydro, hopes to re-establish a self-sustaining colony of Vancouver Island marmots in the historic park.

Environment Minister Barry Penner participated in the historic release although weather conditions made it touch and go for a while. "This is an important part of the effort to restore Vancouver Island marmots to their rightful habitat," said Penner. "I commend everyone involved in the project and I look forward to the day when one of Canada's most endangered mammals is back up to a sustainable population in the wild."

Strathcona Provincial Park is the largest area of protected marmot habitat on Vancouver Island and has been identified as a key area for the recovery of the species. Scientists are hopeful that survival in the park will be better there than in the southern ranges where predation continues to challenge survival of the wild population.

"It remains unclear why the Vancouver Island marmot disappeared from this area decades ago," said MRF Executive Director Viki Jackson. "The habitat remains largely untouched and there are plenty of sub-alpine bowls with suitable vegetation for the marmots to eat. Released animals will be closely monitored to help us understand what may have gone wrong in the past."

The ultimate goal of the recovery program is to have 400-600 animals surviving in three populations on Vancouver Island. The captive breeding program continues to do well with 60 pups born at our partner facilities at the Calgary and Toronto zoos, Mountain View Conservation & Breeding Centre and the Mount Washington Marmot Recovery Centre in 2007 but the numbers in the wild remain a challenge with an estimated 85-95 animals.

"The Vancouver Island marmot remains one of the rarest animals in the world but it's encouraging when you

The VIMSS has applied for $700,000 in matching grants from the North Island Coastal Economic Trust. Their application has already passed phase one and Morson hopes to hear by the end of the year whether they were successful in the next phase.

PacificSport exists to develop elite athletes in their quest for excellence in eight member sports. The Nanaimo-based centre is connected to a network of eight sports centres across B.C. The Vancouver Island Mountain Sports Centre would be the ninth. "We think development of facilities like the VIMSS is critical," said Gord Sleivert, Vice-president of Sport Performance at Pacific Sport.

"There's a whole number of levels on which we think this is beneficial for us," Sleivert said. "One of the reasons we entered into the partnership is to make sure we can help promote the benefits of what they want to achieve...and in doing so make sure there is another facility on Vancouver Island."

PacificSport has 1,000 athletes registered with it services, and many of the high-calibre athletes that train at Mount Washington are already members.

"Mount Washington is a world-class destination for biathlon and other cross-country skiing events," Sleivert said. "Having a facility on the mountain that provides ancillary training (such as an exercise room) is only going to be beneficial having national teams coming and training in the region. "That's another reason we wanted to partner and make this happen."

Sleivert said it is conceivable that the VIMSS could facilitate more than just winter sports. PacificSport already has a national mountain bike training centre in Victoria, but could see hosting mountain bike training camps at Mount Washington in the summer.

remember that the entire wild population was less than 30 animals in 2003", Jackson said. "Since that time we've increased the wild population and built up a robust captive population of around 160 marmots in addition to the 85-90 in the wild. It's still very few animals when you consider other endangered species, like China's Giant panda, number in the thousands".

"With only 3 litters born in the wild last year – and released animals participating in 2 of those litters it's easy to see the survival and success of the wild population depends on the introduction of these new animals". Of the three litters born in the wild in 2007 one litter was to wild parents, one litter was to a wild male and captive-born female and one litter was to captive-born parents.

The Marmot Recovery Program is a unique partnership between the BC Government, landowners, Island Timberlands, TimberWest and Mount Washington Alpine Resort, the Toronto and Calgary Zoos, Mountain View Conservation & Breeding Centre, the Tony Barrett Mount Washington Marmot Recovery Centre and over 10,000 members of the public who have contributed to the Marmot Recovery Foundation, a charitable organization.

"The talking started years ago that really you need somebody on the mountain that brings in all of the stakeholders – there's lots of people that have a stake in Mount Washington and its operations," Resort Director of Marketing Karen Bonell said. What a tourism destination marketing organization does is bring in everybody's opinion on what direction the Resort should go and how it should go about it, Bonell said. Most resorts have a tourism association, she said, using Sun Peaks as an example.

Although Bonell has sat on the Comox Valley Tourism board and seen what that destination marketing organization has done, she said it wasn't appropriate for Mount Washington. "That's really specific to the Comox Valley. We really are between the Comox Valley and Campbell River. We're not tied to one or the other. We see it in many, many ways where we're on our own."

Membership will be voluntary for the majority of homeowners already on the mountain. For newer developments, like Deer and Bear Lodge and Beaufort Heights, membership is mandatory. Fees will be determined on a sliding scale, based on homeowners and sub-lease holders. There are also other categories of membership set up for others. Fees will not be split per unit or number of buildings, but per home or sub-lease. "We worked on fees very carefully to make sure they were fair while we build up the Association and get it off the ground," Nicholson said. The Association's budget will come from membership fees. She estimates the startup budget will be around $140,000.

In return, stakeholders will become part of a collaborated marketing strategy designed to encourage multi-night, mid-week stays and destination stays, which Nicholson is developing. Stakeholders will also gain a forum where they can communicate their thoughts on the direction Resort development is taking, and they will have a voice and a vote on who they want to represent their interests in the Mount Washington Tourism Association. Right now, the Board has been appointed. In the future, elections will take place.

Both Nicholson and Bonell said the stakeholders have reacted positively to the Resort Association. "There's a lot of support," Nicholson said. "It's something that's been necessary for a long time. A lot of people have been looking for it."

"The whole idea here is it can't be just Mount Washington Resort as we grow," Bonell said. "It has to be a bigger entity. We have no stake in accommodation up here (for example). As we grow we can expect a lot more commercial businesses up here. They will be part of the Resort Association. "This is young; it will take awhile," Bonell said. "It's not something that is going to happen overnight."

Nocturnal Nordics?

The 2007-08 ski season will be a quiet one for the Strathcona Nordics compared to last year, when the club played a big role in hosting the International Paralympic Committee World Cup.

"This is a much quieter year for us on the mountain competition-wise," Len Apedaile said. "We aren't hosting any major competitions." The club will oversee some B.C. Winter Games trials at the end of December, the usual Coast Cup race in early March and the VI Loppet, the last on the Provincial and National calendars, at the end of March. Also in March, some of the Club's officials will go to the Callaghan Valley near Whistler and work at the Canadian Nationals.

The big news for the Nordics is the installation of lighting in the Stadium and Biathlon areas as well as some of the new racing trails – and the sprint loop – created for the IPC World Cup. Down the road, if there is enough interest, the Nordics may look at running a full night program. "It's going to be great for us," coach Dave Battison said. "In the past we've had to ski with our headlamps on. It's hard to do tech because you can't see them. The biggest thing is we're just going to be able to see each other."

Strathcona Nordics Youth Show Promise

The Strathcona Nordics are keeping their eye on a pair of prospects as Olympic fever slowly draws to a pitch.

"We've got a couple of kids on our team right now who are quite good," Nordics' Head Coach Dave Battison said. "They're quite young."

Andrea Lee and Stephen Morson are both working with Provincial Cross-Country ski teams right now – Lee with the B.C. Provincial Team and Morson with the B.C. Development Team. Both athletes started in the Jack Rabbits Program when they were younger; Battison has been coaching them for the past four years.

Morson was the Western Canadian Sprint Champion last year. Lee competed in the Canada Winter Games and medaled in the National Championships.

They are just two of 11 athletes on the Junior Team and quite a few Masters Racers who are quite good within the Province: Masters like Rob Trainor, Rick

Members of the Strathcona Nordics gather for a team phot. prior to a practice in Paradise Meadows at Mount Washington last winter.

Morson and Brian Stamp, who have placed in the top three in their Divisions.

Of the club's high-performance racers, Sarah Peters is in Victoria going to Med School and concentrating on dryland training; she ran the Victoria Marathon in the fall, finishing Third in her category.

Kit Richmond, who has already competed in World Cup Events, is in the United States on a full scholarship in Colorado. In 2006 he won the NCAA Distance Championship in cross-country skiing. He also represented Canada in two World Cups at Silver Star and Canmore in 2005.

As the older racers grow up and move away, the Nordics have only to look to their development racers to see the future: the eight to 11-year-olds. There are 15 of them right now, says Battison. "We're teaching them to race."

Olympics Update

As the 2010 Winter Olympic Games creep closer, the Comox Valley's Spirit of B.C. Community Committee continues to attract international teams to Mount Washington Alpine Resort's world-class facilities. The Committee's mandate is to attract such teams to train in the Region.

The Swedish National Team has indicated they want to use Mount Washington's Nordic Facilities in 2010, said Len Apedaile of the Strathcona Nordics. Apedaile was the Project Manager in the bid to bring the International Paralympic Committee's World Cup Race to the Resort last winter. He is also a member of the Spirit Committee.

The Swedes were at Mount Washington last fall to scope out the terrain. "They hoped to come with the team this summer but they changed coaches so held off," Apedaile said. "The new coaches are coming in January to see how it looks in the wintertime."

The Norwegian Biathlon Team visited in late October, he added. They were already committed to training at Silver Star this year.

"With our exposure to the teams during the IPC Event, on the IPC side there's good potential during 2010 when the Olympics are going on that we could see a number of Paralympic teams coming here and acclimatizing," Apedaile said.

The Stadium and Biathlon areas near Raven Lodge have just been installed with lighting, as well as two kilometres of trails (and the sprint loop). The lights were installed as part of the Vancouver Island Mountain Sports Society's legacy from the World Cup. "Having the lights up there is going to make a big difference," Apedaile said. "It's interesting because the general layout and finishing turn into our stadium, there's a lot of similarities to the course in Callaghan Valley"

In addition to attracting international teams to Raven Lodge, Community Committee Chair Susan Kelsey is also pursuing the 2010 Torch Relay to ensure the Comox Valley is one of the stops on the tour. The Olympic Torch last came through the Valley in 1988, on its way to the Winter Olympic Games in Calgary.

Alpine Ski Club Olympic Prospects

The 2010 Winter Olympic Games aren't just a dream for the Comox Valley Spirit of B.C. Community Committee. There are racers with the Mount Washington Ski Club whose dreams are tinted gold, silver and bronze, too.

Allison Forsyth is perhaps the Club's most famous Olympic racer, but there are other names that could one day be household names, says head coach John Trimmer. "Mathieu Leduc is probably one of our best. He skis all events," said Trimmer.

Leduc is training with the Provincial Ski Team, which is a steppingstone for the National Team. "We're hoping he's not coming back with us this season, that he stays with the Provincial Team," Trimmer said. Leduc went to Chile in the summer and also trained at Farnham Glacier near Invermere, where all training runs are accessed by snow cat (it's a favourite location for the National Team). "Mathieu's a great all-around racer and the potential for the future is really good with him." Leduc skis the slalom, giant slalom, super G, super giant slalom and downhill events.

Mathieu Leduc racing at Panorama Ridge last winter. Leduc, a member of the Mount Washington Ski Club, has been training with the national ski team.

While Leduc was concentrating on Canada's National Team, Trimmer was thinking globally earlier in the fall. He took a team of eight athletes to Salzburg, Austria for some training and culture. Burke Grisold, Todd Adams, Sam Wright, Kelsey Francisty, Chelsea Adam, Amanda Bertig, Alexandra Hastings and Zara Mackey all spent two weeks training at Kitzstein Horn Glacier.

"It's an awesome experience; it's a mix of culture and skiing," Trimmer said. This was the second annual trip to Austria for the Mount Washington Ski Club. The team members stayed at the Austrian Ski Academy at 2,600 metres, mingling with some of the best young racers from around the world.

"They're all quite good and they're all quite keen," Trimmer said of the skiers. "That's what it takes at a younger age is a desire to improve and take those events in. We hope to see (the athletes) in many national events this year."

The ski club will host a Coast National Slalom and Giant Slalom event Jan. 12-13, 2008. The zone event will see clubs from Whistler, Seymour, Cypress and Grouse come to Mount Washington.

Trimmer said his club has some athletes at the K2 and J1 levels that could qualify for national events this year. There are 25 currently competing in the elite levels, and 50-75 skiers in the Nancy Greene program. "It's not just about the competitive levels," he said. "All our levels take time to teach the skills - it's a sport (athletes) can enjoy for a lifetime."

For more information on any of these programs, please call Program Director John Trimmer at 250-897-6058 or go online to www.mountwashington.bcalpine.com.

Coach John Trimmer accompanied eight members of the Mount Washington Ski Club to the Austrian Ski Academy at Kitzstein Horn Glacier, near Salzburg alast summer.
